Centre bites the bullet, whittles down EC Act to ease inter-state farm trade

THE PROPOSED Central law will help seamless movement of farm produce not only inter-state, but also within the states. Anyone having a central license can buy and sell anywhere, Ashok Dalwai, chairman, Committee on Doubling Farmers' Income, said.

strangled farm marketing and eroded farmers' incomes by forcing them to sell their produce to only the relevant APMC licencees, met with only limited success. In 2018, Maharashtra did a U-turn within a month of removing all farm produce, including livestock, from the APMC purview through an ordinance.

Of course, in certain cases (such as Bihar), the attempt to abolish the APMC structure without creating alternative marketing infrastructure for farmers only compounded their woes, a point analysts say the government has to bear in mind when it comes up with the new legislation.

However, the proposed Central law, which also promises free inter-state movement of farm commodities without any barrier, could open up avenues of confrontations between the Centre and some states that currently administer the APMC Act. Commenting on the proposed law, the finance ministry said that inter-state movement of goods is a Central subject, hinting that it's free to legislate on this issue. However, where the issue is in the concurrent list (farm marketing, for instance), the Centre's law will have precedence over any state law, it added.

The Centre came out with a draft model APMC law in 2003 and has been pushing for its enactment by states. Around two dozen states have enacted the model APMC law, though with some modifications, but others are reluctant to replace their existing legislation. Even where the model APMC law is supposedly adopted, the old, archaic law still continues to govern the behaviour of market participants.

Ashok Gulati, chair professor of agriculture at ICRIER, had earlier pointed out, "The system kept suffering from highly fragmented markets with insufficient infrastructure; levies and intermediation fees remained high and uneven across states; APMC licencees monopolised trade, leading to rent-seeking and lower share of farmers in the selling price."

According to the Dalwai Committee Report, there are close to 29,547 marketing points in the country. Of these, 22% or 6,615, are regulated markets under the APMC and 22,932 are regional periodical markets. "The package effects states that have issued unified licences to all traders. Mohit Singla, chairman of the Trade Promotion Council of India, said the amendment to the EC Act will help insulate the farmers from price manipulation by different forces. "The prices will now be governed by market demand only and in the long term bring better value to the farmer," he added.

a model law for the much-needed reforms in agriculture marketing and asked all states to emulate it, many have tried to toe the line, but comprehensive reforms have remained frustrated. Among the major states, Maharashtra, West Bengal, Odisha, Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh have complied with the four key reforms mooted in the Centre's model law, namely deregulation of fruits and vegetables trade, facility for anyone to set up private market outside the purview of APMC mandis, single trading licence to enable inter-mandi trade and single-point levy of market fee. However, even these states haven't taken all the follow-up actions required to actually meet the reform objectives — for example, even as the state's APMC law provides for it, Maharashtra is yet to issue unified (all-mandi) licence for traders, whereas less than 1% of licences in Uttar Pradesh and Gujarat are unified ones. Rajasthan, Telangana and Uttarakhand are the only three states that have issued unified licences to all traders.

Mohit Singla, chairman of the Trade Promotion Council of India, said the amendment to the EC Act will help insulate the farmers from price manipulation by different forces. "The prices will now be governed by market demand only and in the long term bring better value to the farmer," he added.
